Course Overview

Amidst rising rates of blood cancer and bone failure states, there exists an evolving landscape of diagnostic tools, prognostic modeling and state of the art therapeutic approaches. Management of such patients can be exceedingly complex which is naturally further confounded by the emotional difficulties surrounding these scenarios. In this context, however, people are indeed living longer and often with a better quality of life as new approaches seek to not only enhance survival but limit toxicity. Nevertheless, great care is needed in diagnosis, managing and monitoring patients along their road to recovery and survivorship. Our conference seeks to enhance knowledge and application of superior management of patients with hematological malignancy and bone marrow failure throughout all facets of care.

Intended Audience

This conference is intended for primary care physicians, hematologists and medical oncologists, fellows, residents, CRNP’s, PA’s, nurses and all other healthcare providers.

Conference Objectives

- Describe the latest approach to diagnosis and prognosis in various forms of hematological malignancy and bone marrow failure
- Implement up-to-date treatment strategies for patients with blood cancer and bone marrow failure
- Describe the evolving role of novel therapeutics for hematological malignancy including monitoring and managing toxicity
- Explain the role of cellular therapy for patients with hematological malignancy and bone marrow failure
- Discuss the latest approaches to acute and chronic GVHD in patients undergoing various forms of cellular therapy
